Main features of Diarchy

- ① The members having power over "reserved subjects" were appointed by British crown.
- ② The Governor selected the elected members from the respective provincial council for handling the "transferred subjects" which were basically the welfare functions and added the Indian ministers accountable to provincial legislative council.
- ③ In case of failure of constitutional machinery in provinces, the governor could even legislate over transferred subjects.

Moreover, the reserved subjects formed the pillars of colonial power → (Rationale).

Law & Order → Coercion.

Finance → Control of expenditure

Administration of Justice → Legal authority.

Revenue → Income

Legislation → Enhancing the income earned.

Though the official reason behind diarchy was administrative efficiency but the real reason was to ensure Imperial authority with the "Carrot & Stick" approach for Indian leaders.
