1909 में मॉर्ले एवं 1917 में मॉन्टेग्यू की घोषणा, दोनों अपने विशिष्ट तरीके से भारत के प्रति ब्रिटिश नीति को आकार प्रदान करने में महत्वपूर्ण थे एवं उन्होंने आने वाले वर्षों में राजनीतिक संवाद को भी प्रभावित किया। चर्चा कीजिए।

"In granting separate electorate, we are sowing the dragon's teeth, the harvest will be bitter".

— Morley in 1909.

"Shiva cut his wife in 52 pieces only to discover that he had 52 wives, the same happens to the Govt. of India when it introduces Mrs. Besant".

— Montague in 1917.

Shaping the direction of British constitutional policy in India

① Morley - Minto Reforms 1909 amid Swadeshi and Boycott movements.

a) The leadership shift in Britain in 1905, opened the possibility of reforms in India after Lord Curzon's imperialistic policies.

b) The morley - minto reforms marked the beginning of representative institutions but not representative democracy →

c) It introduced the system of separate electorates for Muslim Community in Central Legislative Council, that too with lower income qualification for electoral college.

↳ Curzon's motive of dividing the organized National movement along religious and communal lines, instead transformed an 'anti-agitation ^{partition}' into "full fledged mass movement".

↳ Morley-Minto reforms, though expanded Indian representation in councils but attempted to divide India along communal lines and the role of Indians in Council was that of advisory body only.

~~For~~ For the first time, an Indian was added to Governor General executive Council.

Satyendra Prasad Sinha.

↳ Indians were allowed to ask supplementary questions as well. Indirect elections for non-official members was also introduced, enabling their majority in Provincial Legislative Councils.

② Montague chelmsford reforms in 1918 -

a) Annie Besant & Tilak got nationwide support in their "All India Home Rule League".

b) The govt. failed to silence Tilak but placed Mrs. Annie under house arrest along with BP Wadia and George Arundale.

c) It was this arrest that mounted pressure from all over India on British Authority and resulted in August declaration of 1917 after the release of Besant.

Thus, the British represented dual characteristic through their reforms - ensuring colonial supremacy while expanding council expansion in carefully calibrated way. The British constitutional policies ultimately transformed the Constitutional reforms into instruments of imperial politics by introducing divisions in India through partition of Bengal in 1905 & separate electorates in 1909.

"When Tyranny becomes law, revolution becomes order"

— Puerto Campos, Nationalist & Politician.

The British expansion in India was not a passive acceptance but was accompanied by continuous resistance. The British policies disrupted the existing political authority, agrarian relations, sociocultural institutions & tribal autonomy which led to various civil, military, peasant & tribal uprising in India.

Causes of Rising resentment among Indian Populace

① Political dispossession - British expansion displaced traditional rulers, military elites, tribal chiefs and zamindars. Annexations, centralized administration and erosion of hereditary rights created widespread resentment among local power structures.

② Economic exploitation - The oppressive land revenue policies of British, commercialization of agriculture and increasing influence of moneylenders led to various uprisings.

Ex.- Rangpur Dhing in Bengal (1783) was due to Ijaradari system / Revenue farming,

The rebellion of Jungle Mahal (1798), Bengal due to British land revenue policies.

③ Tribal Alienation - British introduced a legally defined ownership of land which ultimately led to commodification of land, resulting in Tribals losing their customary rights and ownership.

Ex.- Munda Rebellion (1899) - The main cause were - British Forest Acts (1865, 1878, 1927), disturbing Munda's "Khuntkatti System" of joint land ownership & also subjecting them to "Beth Begari" (Wageless labour).

④ Collapse of Indian Artisanal Industry

British agents (Gomastas) forced artisans to sell their produce exclusively to East India Company & even formalized the practice through "Khatbandi System, 1780". The ruin of industries was accompanied by deindustrialization and pushed artisans to agriculture.

These uprisings did not achieved any independence but the accumulated resistance created over a century was culminated in the Revolt of 1857 which ignited the "anti-colonial consciousness" of masses and shifted the Company's rule to crown rule.

Dadabhai Naoroji was the first person to give the evidence based colonial critique of colonialism through his drain of wealth theory in his book - "Poverty & Un-British Rule in India". He gave Indian Nationalism his first coherent ideology by systematically analysing the drain of wealth.

He explained the drain of wealth in form of Components

① Home charges - These were expenditure incurred in Britain on behalf of India by the office of Secretary of state.

Public Debt - East India Company acquired a lot of Public debt, mainly in displacing Indian rulers. The interest on this debt was paid from Indian Revenue.

② Revenue outflow - The excess of exports over imports reaped no material benefit to India.

③ Mangoing Agency System - European capitalists contracted the management of day to day ops. to agencies such as - Carr, Andrew & Yule (Jute plantations), this led to a huge capital investment in India but with a "vested interest" & very heavy "security of investment".

Ironically, the very economic policies that strengthened British Empire, also undermined its legitimacy. The experience of deindustrialization, drain of wealth, recurring famines made "Economy" the first battleground for India's struggle for SWARAJ.
