The British expansion in India disrupted the existing political authority, agrarian relations, tribal autonomy, socio-cultural institutions which led to various peasant, tribal, civil & military uprisings. These movements though localized and fragmented, collectively constituted the 1st phase of anti-colonial resistance that culminated into revolt of 1857.

Factors leading to Emergence

- ① Political dispossession - British colonial policies displaced traditional rulers, zamindars, military elites as well as "tribal chieftancy". The annexations and centralized administration disrupted the long existing political authority which resulted in widespread resentment among local power structures.
- ② Economic exploitation - Commercialization of Agriculture, Oppressive land revenue policies increased influence of moneylenders worsened the conditions of peasants alongside Tribals.
- ③ Tribal Alienation - British introduced "legally defined ownership" through "pattas", "khasras" etc, eroding the customary and hereditary land rights of Tribals $\Rightarrow$ further accelerated dispossession.

Question -

④ Collapse of Indigenous industries - The East India Company agents such as "Gomastas" and legal systems like "khatbandi System, 1780" compelled artisans to exclusively work for EIC $\Rightarrow$ further impoverishment among Artisans.

Thus, the British expansion in India was accompanied by popular resistance. From forests & villages to cantonments and princely States, the opposition to British rule evolved alongside the Empire itself. Thus, the revolt of 1857 cannot be seen as an "isolated explosion" but the convergence of a century's accumulated resistance.
