Question - What were the motivations for the formation of the Grand Alliance against the British by figures like Mir Qasim, Shuja-ud-Daula, Shah-Alam-II, and how did the resulting Battle of Buxar shape the colonial administration in India?

Motivations for the formation of grand alliance by Mir Qasim (Bengal Nawab), Shuja-ud-Daula (Awadh ruler) and Mughal emperor Shah-Alam-II -

1. Remove Robert Clive from Bengal administration.
2. To facilitate the trade in Bengal by abolishing inland duties on Indian traders.
3. Bengal Nawabs were just having a nominal authority and British who were earlier involved in trading and are now setting the stage for colonial rule in India.
4. The Bengal treasury was flowing from Bengal to Britain.

Battle of Buxar Shaping the Colonial administration in India

Start with brief context of post-Plassey Bengal political situation in 1764

Good identification of motivations. Explain how abolition of inland duties affected trade relations between British and local merchants

Remove the claim about 'ten-times bigger army' as it's factually incorrect. Focus on the strategic significance of the victory

Excellent explanation of dual system of governance showing clear understanding of administrative changes

- 1. Battle of Buxar increased the prestige of British East India Company in Britain as it defeated a ten-times bigger army of a Native ruler of India.
- 2. Since Bengal was the richest province of Mughal India, British ~~to~~ started channelizing this money in fighting with regional powers.
- 3. After Plassey Plunder, British got a huge stock of money and were financially very strong to fight with other strong powers of India.
- 4. Robert Clive separated Civil administration from Revenue collection by starting Dual System of Governance. It was a smart move to avoid civil administration (Nizamat function) while easily getting the revenue.

Battle of Plassey shaped the future of Bengal but the Battle of Buxar shaped the future of India.

Effective conclusion comparing significance of Plassey and Buxar battles
